

President George Washington

“Of all the dispositions and habits which lead to political prosperity, religion and morality are indispensable supports. In vain would that man claim the tribute of patriotism who should labor to subvert these great pillars of human happiness... The politician and the pious man ought to respect and cherish them...”

Washington's
Farewell Address

What Does It Mean to Be American?

Several years ago, I visited Washington D.C. As an American, there are few places that are better to stir up one's patriotic passions. I especially wanted to see the Declaration of Independence, the Constitution, and the Bill of Rights, so I made a trip to the National Archives. I saw with my own eyes the phrase, “We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal...”

From there, I walked across the plaza to the Smithsonian National Museum of Natural History, where there was a large exhibit dedicated to Charles Darwin (who is not American) entitled, “The Evolution of Evolution.” The exhibit praised Darwin's ideas for discovering the origin of our species and it extolled the unfounded virtues of natural selection. I did not expect to see such an exhibit in a nation built on creationism.

I left the Smithsonian deeply saddened. We protect a document like the Declaration of Independence under lock and key, in a building with metal detectors and armed guards, a document that gives evidence of our values, yet we dedicate an entire wing of a museum to an idea that is the opposite of what that document says. Darwinism is a theory that is not at all self-evident, because it has no evidence at all to support it. Are we confused or just ignorant? Why did we spend millions of dollars to enshrine a lie when that big piece of paper from 1776 tells us a truth that is self-evident? That's when it hit me. We are not confused. We're trying to hide something. We are trying to hide our heritage, our true identity.

Americanism

The dissolution of our republic has caused me frustration and heartache. As Americans, we condone philosophies and activities that are simply un-American. What do I mean? Well, before I explain, I must first define what it means to be American.

Just as many “Christians” don't know what it means to be Christian, so also many Americans don't know what it means to be American. The definition of American entails more than just being born here, living here, or becoming a citizen. The meaning of American entails more than simply loving this great land and even fighting for or dying for it.

What Does It Mean to Be American?

Declaration of Independence

“When in the course of human events, it becomes necessary for one people to dissolve the political bands which have connected them with another, and to assume among the powers of the earth, the separate and equal station to which the Laws of Nature and Nature's God entitle them, a decent respect to the opinions of mankind requires that they should declare the causes which impel them to the separation.

“We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights, that among these are life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness, that to secure these rights, governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed, that whenever any form of government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the right of the people to alter or to abolish it and to institute new government, laying its foundation on such principles and organizing its powers in such form as to them shall seem most likely to affect their safety and happiness.”

The definition of an American is comprised of elements that I call Americanism. I realize Americanism is viewed by many in a negative light. They have been taught that Americanism refers to racists, greedy profiteering, stealing land, warmongering, or taking advantage of others. The term Americanism, like many of our words today, has been redefined by those who despise our heritage. I will show you that none of these characteristics is American at all. In fact, they contradict the heart of what it means to be American.

Americanism is a set of ideas. Thus, to understand what it means to be American is to embrace those ideas that are unique to our country. They are ideas that have made the United States distinct among the nations of history. In 1831, a Frenchman named Alexis de Tocqueville visited the U.S.. He remarked, “The position of the Americans is quite exceptional. It may be believed that no people will ever be placed in a similar one.” This objective observer recognized that Americanism is exceptional.

Historian David Barton defined America's exceptionalism as “the unprecedented stability, freedom, and prosperity that is the result of the institutions and policies produced by our unique governing philosophy.” Notice that our stability, freedom, and prosperity were produced by our institutions and policies. However, that which produced our institutions and policies was our “unique governing philosophy.” The fruit of our national tree is the product of its roots. What, then, are those roots that produced such fruit?

The Root of the Fruit

The roots of America's exceptionalism are the principles upon which our nation was founded. What are those principles and where can they be found? They are found in four primary documents – the Declaration of Independence, the Constitution, the Bill of Rights, and George Washington's Farewell Address. Of these documents, the principles are most concisely summarized in our nation's birth certificate – the Declaration of Independence. The Constitution, Bill of Rights, and Farewell Address reflect these principles. They are identified in the first 182 words of the Declaration.

The Creator

The first American principle is that all men are created equal. Thus, to Americanism acknowledges the reality of the Creator. For our nation to reject the existence of the Creator and embrace Darwinism is fundamentally un-American. It defies our founding document.

The acknowledgment of the Creator is significant for several reasons. It affirms that God preceded man. God was not created by man, rather man was created by God. To acknowledge the Creator is to recognize that there is a higher power than man. Since God is the higher power and man was created by Him, then it naturally follows that man is accountable to Him. The fact that all men are a work of this divine Creator makes them equals. Anyone who promotes inequality by way of gender, color, ethnicity, social status, or any other reason is promoting an idea that is blatantly un-American. All people are equals before God.

Natural Law

The second principle is this – our institutions are based on the Laws of Nature. The Law of Nature is the term the Founders used for the laws of God, which all men instinctively know. They are branded on our conscience. Why does that matter?

As God is our Creator and as all men are accountable to Him, God makes the rules. His laws are supreme. His laws are not to be offended, by men or nations, without consequences. Because He is the all-wise Creator and Sovereign, and as He knows best how to establish order, peace, and prosperity, those who would build a society upon His divine laws would inherit His favor and blessing. Also, under God's pure and immutable laws, all men are united and measured by one standard, thus producing an enduring stability and true justice for all people.

Where do we find the Laws of Nature? Though all men know them intuitively, because of conscience (every man knows it is wrong to lie, cheat, steal, and murder), God has given us His moral law in the Ten Commandments and the teachings of Jesus. In these, we have the best system of morality in history. No other code has produced more peace, prosperity, or liberty. Therefore, Americanism ensures that our laws compliment God's laws, rather than contradict them. To replace or reject God's laws would be to elevate ourselves above God, a pathway that has historically led to death (Proverbs 14:12).

Inalienable Rights

The third principle is that our rights come from God not men. The Founders called them “inalienable rights,” given to men by their Maker, antecedent to any human authority. If our rights were given to us by men (government), then it would follow that we would only retain those rights at their pleasure. Therefore, any institution that infringes upon our rights is committing an act that is un-American.

Rights are inherent, part of our human nature. All men are created by God, made in His image. Therefore, every person has value and purpose. Every person has rights to be protected, no matter what his age, gender, color, ethnicity, etc. To enslave one person is to threaten the rights of all people.

Purpose of Government

The fourth principle is that the purpose of civil government is to protect our rights. The Declaration states “that to secure these rights, governments are instituted among men.” Our rights are antecedent to government, meaning that they existed before government. Also, civil governments are instituted by men for men. Abraham Lincoln affirmed this principle in his Gettysburg Address, when he described our government as “of the people, by the people, and for the people.”

Civil government is a divine institution, but its structure is a creature of the people, meaning that under God, the people are the highest authority, and that which they construct is under their control. In other words, civil government was made for man. Man was not made for civil government. Furthermore, civil government is the servant, not the master, of the people. It exists to protect their rights and liberties,

Alexis de Tocqueville

“Upon my arrival in the United States, the religious aspect of the country was the first thing that struck my attention; the longer I stayed, the more I perceived the great political consequences resulting from this new state of things. Religion in America must be regarded as the foremost of the political institutions of that country... I do not know whether all Americans have a sincere faith in their religion, for who can search the human heart? But, I am certain that they hold it to be indispensable to the maintenance of republican institutions. This opinion is not peculiar to a class of citizens or a party, but it belongs to the whole nation, to every rank of society.

“I sought for the key to the greatness and genius of America... Not until I went into the churches of America and heard her pulpits, aflame with righteousness, did I understand the secret of her genius and power. America is great because America is good; and, if America ever ceases to be good, America will cease to be great.”

Democracy in America

What Does It Mean to Be American?

American or Un-American?

Our spiritual enemy, who knows that this country is the best example of a godly civilization, has done all within his power to undermine our principles. Most hurtful has been his attack on our public recognition of the Creator. In our schools and universities, we teach the atheist tenets of secular humanism, which are un-American. We have embraced the doctrines of Darwinian evolution. But, if men are accidents of nature, can they have inherent rights and value? How can they? Rights must then come from another place, like civil government. But wait, that too is un-American!

What about the Supreme Court's decision to reject the Ten Commandments or the concept that man's person and possessions belong to the State, that the government has a right to take, do, and give whatever it wants? How about the invasion of a baby's right to live, the censoring of free speech, the threat to remove our right to self-defense, or religious liberty? What about forcing citizens to pay into limitless tax and social programs, to buy certain health-care packages, or to tolerate activities against their conscience? Are these American ideas?

Our education system, sadly, is doing what it was designed to do -- produce graduates that are ignorant of true Americanism. For decades, our political leaders, who swear to uphold American values have condoned activities that are un-American. As a result, liberty is being supplanted by tyranny and slavery. If these ideas are un-American, are they not by nature anti-American?

not to prohibit them. When we idolize the State (or subject our lives to its unfettered control), then we are defying an American principle. Therefore, ideas like Communism, socialism, fascism, and progressivism are un-American.

Limited Government

The fifth principle is that for liberty to last, civil government must be limited. We know that men are imperfect and corrupt, and that no one who has power should be trusted. With power, men must have accountability. Since civil government is comprised of men, it tends to be corrupt and abusive. It also tends to expand control. Therefore, civil government must be kept in check.

The way that the American people restricted their civil government was by the Constitution. While our officials are given power, that power is separated into three branches and, then, limited in its scope. Each branch has narrow responsibilities. Everything outside of its jurisdiction is to be left to the people and their states.

Our officials are representatives of the people, elected to do their will and none other. As all men are equals, all men are to be represented; and equals do not rule equals without their consent. Thus, any proposed legislation, union, or national direction must be representative, ratified not coerced.

The bottom line is that a limited civil government allows for a greater degree of liberty and individual self-government, while an ever-expanding civil government assumes more control and, thus, consumes more of the people's rights and liberties. No human government can be trusted. It must be kept in line with its original purposes. That responsibility falls to the American people.

American in Name Only

Thomas Jefferson penned the Declaration of Independence. He wrote, in a letter to Henry Lee, that it was "intended to be an expression of the American mind." To understand Americanism is to embrace the ideas expressed in that document. However, many people pretend to be American while despising everything America stands for. They won't acknowledge the Creator, because they don't want to admit that they are accountable to Him. Without Him in the picture, they can play His role and call the shots, molding America into their image.

Their image is what we are seeing today -- division, disorder, tyranny, perversion, and oppression. United by our true identity as Americans, we can be free. However, if we replace true Americanism with secular ideals, then we will be enslaved.

Finally, President Abraham Lincoln once said, "At what point is the approach of danger to be expected? I answer, if it ever reach us, it must spring up amongst us. It cannot come from abroad. If destruction be our lot, we must ourselves be its author and finisher. As a nation of freemen, we must live through all time or die by suicide."
